PRONE 2021 – METHODS' SUMMER SCHOOL

31 MAY, 1-2 JUNE 2021 ONLINE (LISBON TIME)

Speakers (by order of appearance in the programme):

Iver B. Neumann is Director of the Fridtjof Nansen Institute, in Norway. He holds two PhDs, one in Politics by Oxford University and the other in Social Anthropology by Oslo University, and was Montague Burton Professor of International Relations, at the London School of Economics and Political Science between 2012 and 2017. His overarching research interest is in how politics relate to one another, in pre-history, in history, in imagined worlds, and in principle. He usually draws on Continental social theory to analyse this, and uses empirical examples from Russian foreign policy, Norwegian foreign policy and, increasingly, from archaeology. He has published extensively. His last book on 'Diplomatic Tenses: A Social Evolutionary Perspective on Diplomacy' came out in 2020 with Manchester University Press.

Jean Michel Montsion is Associate Director of the York Centre for Asian Research (YCAR), Coordinator of the Graduate Diploma in Asian Studies at York University, and Associate Professor at Glendon College, York University, in Canada. His research is mainly centered on ethnic, urban and mobility questions. Focusing on issues like gateway cities that connect Canada and Asia, migration patterns and experiences, community-based politics, and indigenous diplomacies. He has widely published on these topics.

William A. Callahan is professor of International Relations at the London School of Economics and Political Science. His book Sensible Politics: Visualizing International Relations, published by Oxford University Press in February 2020, is the first book-length analysis of visuality, multisensory politics, and IR. Professor Callahan also makes documentary films, among others, 'Great Walls: Journeys from Ideology to Experience' (2020), published in the Journal of Narrative Politics in Spring 2020; and 'You can see CHINA from here' in The Diplomat in April 2020. In 2019-20, he was nominated for an 'Innovation in Teaching' award for his course of 'Visual International Politics', which integrates visual analysis and creative filmmaking.

Nizar Messari is the dean of the School of Humanities and Social Sciences at Al Akhawayn University in Ifrane, Morocco. He holds a PhD in International Studies from The University of Miami, Florida. He held different teaching positions in Brazil between 2001 and 2009, and mainly at the Pontifical Catholic University of Rio de Janeiro where he was Associate Dean for Graduate Studies. He also held several consulting positions in Brazil, and in particular to the Brazilian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, to the Brazilian Military and to the Brazilian Oil Company, Petrobras. He has widely published in issues related to International Relations Theory, International Security and Middle Eastern politics, including in relations between Islam and the West. His publications include Teoria das Relações Internacionais: Correntes e Debates and another forthcoming book: Displacing IR: Peripheral Approaches to International Theory.

Katarzyna Grabska is a Senior Researcher at the Peace Research Institute Oslo (PRIO), in Norway. A social anthropologist, her research focuses on gender, generation, youth, displacement, refugees, return of displaced populations, impact of war on gender and generational relations, and identities, access to rights for refugees in urban settings, art and activism in the context of war and conflict. She works with visual media, art-based research, feminist methodologies, and participatory methodologies. She has several publications on these topics.

Stefano Guzzini is Professor of Government, Uppsala University and Professor of International Relations, PUC-Rio de Janeiro. His main areas of research are international theory, social theories of power, foreign policy analysis, security studies, as well as conceptual analysis and interpretivist methodologies. His publications include 'The return of geopolitics in Europe? Social mechanisms and foreign policy identity crises' (2012) and 'Power, Realism and Constructivism' (2013) which received the ISA Theory Section Best Book Award. He is currently co-editor of International Theory.

Eleanor Knott is an Assistant Professor of Qualitative Methodology at the London School of Economics and Political Science, in London. Her research interests, beyond qualitative methodology and case studies, focuses on the nexus between identity and citizenship, particularly in the Post-Soviet space. She has published in Perspectives on Politics, Journal of Ethnic and Migration Studies, East European Politics, Citizenship Studies, Democratization and Qualitative Research, among others, and is currently working on a book comparing the kin-state politics of identity and citizenship in Crimea and Moldova.

Bernardo Fazendeiro is Assistant Professor in International Relations at the Faculty of Economics of the University of Coimbra (FEUC) and researcher at the Centre for Social Studies (CES), specialising in interpretivist International Relations and post-Soviet politics. He looks at how narratives and the constitutive elements thereof, such as roles, time and space affect the way in which we interpret events in IR and the Post-Soviet space in general. He is currently the Director of the Master in international Relations at FEUC. He has published in the Review of International Studies, International Affairs, Central Asian Survey and International Studies Review, and his book on Uzbekistan's foreign policy was published by Routledge in 2017.

Teresa Almeida Cravo is a Researcher at the Centre for Social Studies and an Assistant Professor in International Relations at the Faculty of Economics, both at the University of Coimbra, Portugal. She is currently the head of the International Relations Department at the Faculty of Economics of the University of Coimbra (FEUC) and the coordinator of its undergraduate degree in International Relations. Her research interests include critical perspectives on peace and violence, security, development, global interventionism and foreign policy, particularly within the Lusophone context, as well as poststructuralism and discourse analysis.

Christine Hine is Professor of Sociology at the University of Surrey. She has a major interest on the role played by new technologies in the knowledge construction process, and thus in the development of ethnography in technical settings and in 'virtual methods' (the use of the Internet in social research). In particular, she has developed mobile and connective approaches to ethnography that combine online and offline social contexts. Her last publications include 'Strategies for reflexive ethnography in the smart home: autoethnography of silence and emotion' (2019), 'The evolution and diversification of Twitter as a cultural artefact in the British Press 2007-2014' (2019), and 'Conversational agents and the making of mental health recovery' (2020).
